L'ANCIENNE BOUCHERIE
Artist Residency and Gallery

L'Ancienne Boucherie is a converted 16th century building located in the picturesque old port town of Bréhémont on the banks of the Loire River in central France.

Formerly the village butcher shop with living quarters above, the building was abandoned when the last butcher left in 2012. Renovation began on the building in 2014 and it is now near completion, with the new layout consisting of three separate self-catering apartments on three levels and a large shared workshop/exhibition space on the ground floor in the former shop, which has large glass shop windows overlooking the Loire River.

The exhibition space is accessible from the street and exhibitions and/or demonstrations can be easily organized in the space itself, either on a modest scale or in conjunction with the municipality, allowing for much more exhibition space in communal buildings if need be.

Situated within minutes cycling distance of many of the area's most famous castles and wineries, the property is ideally located for exploring the region known as the 'Garden of France'. The calm, quiet riverside setting is conducive to reflection, creative work and artistic inspiration of all sorts.
